Toronto-based air purification pioneer experienced hypergrowth due to agile delivery of products during the pandemic

TORONTO — Surgically Clean Air Inc.™ (SCA), a top provider in premium air purification solutions for medical professionals, businesses, and educational institutions, announced today that it has been named to the prestigious The Americas' Fastest Growing Companies list, which is published by FT, for the third year in a row. Surgically Clean Air attained the 36th spot thanks to an absolute growth rate of 2,348.1% over the last 12 months. The company was listed at number 321 in 2020 and 253 in 2021.

Marshal Sterio, Surgically Clean Air's Founder & CEO commented, "We are honoured to be ranked the 36th fastest growing company in the Americas this year. We've worked incredibly hard as a team to serve our customers and this acknowledgment humbles and inspires us. Winning this award will only help us continue on our amazing growth trajectory and we can't wait to see what the next year has in store for us!"

Surgically Clean Air's rapid growth comes at a time that captures the resiliency of businesses that have adapted and grown during the pandemic. Not only have the companies on the list been very competitive within their markets, but to stand out differentiation and flexibility were key.

About Surgically Clean Air

Surgically Clean Air was launched in 2010 by Marshal Sterio and Douglas Eaton to address the critical need to improve indoor air quality within commercial applications. The company's first-generation air treatment system was invented as a rapid response to the SARS epidemic. Building on their early success, Surgically Clean Air leveraged its in-house research and development expertise to expand its product line across multiple industries. The company is based in Toronto with offices throughout the United States and one location in the United Kingdom.
